

Develop your fair access practice using our guided self-assessment

The benefits to you

Our guided self-assessment identifies ways forward for you to:

- Build on your strengths
- Make your current practice more effective
- Work around barriers that impact negatively on fair access

Aspects of practice considered

We focus on three main areas:

- Communicating with targeted and/or hard-to-reach groups
- Effective activities that influence young people's pathways to HE
- Working in partnership

The process

We believe that it is essential to identify your existing good practice before suggesting ways forward.

This approach is based on our highly successful work with schools and colleges. It involves asking those involved with fair access at your institution about current practice, using online questionnaires and a small number of face-to-face meetings. We combine our experience and expertise with the information we collect to suggest the most effective ways to develop your practice.

What next?

Contact Moira Sheehan, our Director of Advisory Services, to discuss the guided self-assessment further.

